CONTENT MARKETING
BENCHMARKS, BUDGETS, AND TRENDS

INSIGHTS FOR 2022
Content Marketing: A strategic marketing approach focused on creating and distributing valuable, relevant, and consistent content to attract and retain a clearly defined audience—and, ultimately, to drive profitable customer action.

Success: Achieving your organization’s desired/targeted results.
Welcome to the Enterprise Content Marketing Benchmarks, Budgets, and Trends: Insights for 2022 report. This report looks back on the last 12 months and includes expectations for 2022.

The research suggested that, due to lockdowns and work-from-home mandates, content marketing piqued the interest of many who were previously unaware of its power. With more people than ever spending time online, content marketing presented a prime opportunity to get and stay in front of audiences.

As in the previous year, nearly one in three enterprise marketers said their organization was extremely or very successful with content marketing. These marketers, our “top performers,” have certain characteristics that set them apart from their peers (see page 4). A few of the biggest things they do are to differentiate their content and use content collaboration/calendaring/workflow tools.

No matter how successful they are at content marketing, most respondents plan to invest in video in 2022: 72% of all enterprise respondents forecast investment in this area followed by investment in events (62%), paid media (59%), and owned-media assets (55%).

And, yes, challenges remain. The top challenge, which is the same as it was two years ago, is internal communication between teams/silos (57%). It indicates a pressing need to formalize content operations in enterprises that have not yet done so.

Here’s to a prosperous 2022!

Our research points to transformational shifts to make content marketing an ever more important part of the integrated marketing mix.

But what can go unnoticed are the dangers that lurk when we’re so close. There’s a wonderful scene in the movie “Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade” when the rich investor, Walter Donovan, is trying to convince Indy to go after the Holy Grail. He says, “We’re on the verge of completing a quest that began almost 2,000 years ago. We’re just one step away.” Indy responds, “That’s usually when the ground falls out from underneath your feet.”

In business today, everyone creates content — from the web team to the marketing automation/demand gen executives, even front-line account representatives. It’s probably easier to count who DOESN’T create content-driven experiences for customers these days.

But we must realize that this explosive trend is our quest. Our attempts to complete it require us to develop not just great content, but an operational strategy that supports all content. Without a strategy, an inconsistent voice and inability to measure success make our failure imminent.

But don’t overcorrect and let the ground fall out from underneath you. When businesses create a content strategy, there is a tendency to limit the production of content and remove the voices of all front-line managers. We centralize the storytelling function, and not only centralize the creation of the voice but the expression of it as well.

What happens? Increasingly we see companies creating much more consistent and customer-centric sets of content. They get their voice and story back. But unfortunately, they remove their best storytellers — the rest of the business — from telling it. And as a friend of mine who was cut from a huge Hollywood movie once told me, “It’s hard to be excited about a story that you were removed from telling.”

My advice?

A scalable, successful, and differentiating content marketing strategy will help you more easily create, manage, activate, and measure digital content. You will define success by how well the content marketing strategy empowers everybody on the front lines (sales, account reps, executives, and even accounting and legal) to tell your stories — and the best “next stories” — to your audience.

A strategic content marketing operation isn’t the storyteller of the business. It enables everyone else to be the storytellers.

Remember: It’s your story — don’t forget that you need everyone to tell it well.
This report was produced by Content Marketing Institute (CMI).

The results are from the CMI/MarketingProfs 12th Annual Content Marketing Survey. The online survey was emailed to a sample of marketers using lists from CMI and MarketingProfs.

A total of 1,275 recipients from around the globe — representing a range of industries, functional areas, and company sizes — replied to the survey during July 2021.

This report presents the findings from the 228 marketers who indicated their organization employs 1,000 or more people and that they are a content marketer, involved with the content marketing function, and/or someone to whom content marketing reports. Most of the respondents were from North America.

What’s the marketing X-factor for today’s most successful brands? According to the minds at Imagination, a Chicago-based agency that works with both emerging and household brands, it’s all about execution.

This year, Imagination wants marketers to tune out the noise, embrace agility and focus on creating audience-first content. Below, the award-winning agency shares three ways to do just that.

1. Glance at the competition. Don’t obsess over them.
   An analysis of what your biggest competitors are doing can certainly inform your content strategy. It can show you how they organize their content, how often they publish, the topics they’ve covered and the media types they like to use. Most of the time, however, your competitors aren’t doing anything too groundbreaking. There are always innumerable topics that they haven’t covered yet, and with a little creativity you can even breathe new life into well-worn terrain. So rather than obsess over your competition, quickly take stock of them before designing and executing your own content strategy.

2. Create, measure and adapt. Avoid strategy paralysis.
   Data is helpful, but remember that it’s always looking backward in time. The most impactful content marketing campaigns originate from an understanding of your audience and a great idea. So don’t let a shortage of data hold you back from creating amazing, one-of-a-kind content. Instead, use data to measure the impact of what you’re publishing. Those signals can help you decide what to do more of, what to do less of, and what to optimize and repurpose.

3. Add metrics within your control to your KPI list.
   When most marketers think of key performance indicators, they tend to assume that the “performance” part relates to their content and campaigns. What about your team’s performance? It’s measurable if you track KPIs such as pieces of content published per month and introduce content quality scores based on peer reviews and audience feedback. Try focusing on those KPIs within your team’s direct control, and you’ll likely see improvement across more traditional KPIs such as traffic, shares and conversions.

As you can see, execution is the name of the game this year. To get more content marketing insights delivered directly to your inbox, subscribe to The Spark, Imagination’s bi-weekly newsletter.
